The Norton Science and Language Academy opened in 2008 to serve the student population of the San Bernardino area near the Norton Air Force Base with a focus on science and language, joining the Academy for Academic Excellence as the Lewis Center for Educational Research's second charter school. It is a dual immersion program where all students learn in two languages-- Spanish and English-- from transitional kindergarten through eighth grade. The program also has a focus on science that is supported by a long-standing partnership with NASA/JPL.

Norton's current site, the Mill Center, was home to the first black teacher in San Bernardino County and the state's first black school administrator, Dorothy Inghram. The Norton Science and Language Academy 10th Anniversary Gala proceeds will go towards funding a permanent TK-12th grade campus for the school.
